Barre's postoffice is named as the logical depot for Orange, Lamotte and Washington counties in a new system for the distribution of postal supplies that is to become effective July 1. Instead of each office, whether first, second, third or fourth class applying directly to Washington, D. C., the state will be divided among four different offices. No post-offices in any of the four districts will apply to Washington directly for its supplies unless exception may be made of the postoffices whence distributions are to be made. To Burlington, Addison, Chittenden, Grand Isle and Franklin counties will be assigned. The four post-office depots are likely to be Barre, Burlington, Rutland and St. Albans. The new plan is calculated to expedite distributions, save money, and generally facilitate the business of the various post-offices. It is stated that the basement in the Barre postoffice is admirably adapted to the storing of supplies.
